

ILPA ANNOUNCES NEW PODCAST SERIES – VOICES OF PRIVATE EQUITY

Bi-Weekly Series Gives Listeners an Inside Look at the Industry and the People in it

September 15, 2020 (Washington, DC) – Today ILPA announced the launch of its new Podcast Series – Voices of Private Equity. The new, biweekly series will feature prominent figures from across the private equity industry in candid, personal conversations about the industry itself and their place within it.

The episodes will center around guest’s insights, strategies and thoughts on the private equity industry as it evolves among ever changing market dynamics. Listeners will also hear about how leaders in the industry are addressing topical issues like improving diversity and inclusion and addressing environmental, societal and governance shortcomings.

The podcast series host, Managing Director of Industry Affairs at ILPA, Jen Choi commented: “I am so excited about how this new series will provide a unique lens into the private equity industry. We’re going to have conversations with real people about an industry they are passionate about, but listeners won’t hear a standard script. We’re going to dive into each guest’s personal view and experience.” She added, “I wanted the voice of each guest to come through in the conversation. Where else can you hear about a leading fund manager’s favorite hobby or from one of the biggest pension funds in Europe about their career trajectory? We’ll be talking about those things too.”

The podcast series will be available for subscription on all major podcast platforms as well as the ILPA website. For more information on the series itself or to follow up on a particular episode’s conversation reach out to Jen Choi at jchoi@ilpa.org.
